In Campus Training Programme on Climate Risk Management

(19 to 21 February 2025)

Introduction : Climate change is no longer a distinct possibility and is evident through rise in temperatures, warming of oceans, increase in sea levels, irregular rainfall patterns, surge in extreme weather events, etc. Risks arising out of climate change bear the capacity to alter agricultural production and hurt a nation's food security prospects. Effects on agricultural production, productivity and incomes, lead distressed livelihoods and endanger sustainability of households. Climate risks for enterprises emerge both from physical risks causing damage to physical assets or disruptions in supply chains and consequently enhanced losses. On the other hand, transition risks arise from shift to a low carbon emission, leading from change in consumer preferences and / or government and pressure to adopt sustainable practices, failing which enterprises could face financial losses and reputational damage. Enterprises which heed environment together with addressing social and governance issues could be considered to be ensuring sustainability of their ventures.

Banks and financial institutions are exposed to climate change risks through their financing to individuals as well as enterprises, who in turn are affected by climate change. Risks possibilities range from increased incidence of defaults or lower value of assets and collaterals. On 28 February 2024, the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) issued draft guidelines on 'Disclosure Framework on Climate-related Financial Risks, 2024', which mandates disclosure by Regulated Entities on governance, strategy, risk management and, metrics and targets, with a view to mainstreaming climate related risks into organizational functioning.

The exposure to climate risks vary considerably between and within countries and production systems and thus effective adaptation options vary as well. Climate change has the potential for not only financial but deep rooted environmental and socio-economic impacts. Addressing climate change involves both adaptation and mitigation strategies and efforts. Appropriate climate risk management reduces vulnerability of communities, improves their resilience and promotes sustainability. Climate risk management involves identification, assessment and management of climate related risks. Climate change provides both upside as well as downside and it is expected that the opportunities arising from climate change will outweigh the downside in the long run, generating considerable opportunities for financial sector, developmental agencies, government departments, etc. Accordingly, BIRD Mangaluru has conceived an in-campus training programme Banks/FIs, NGOs, FPOs, CSR Wings, Trusts, Societies, Government Departments, etc., with the following objectives :

Objectives: At the end of the programme, the participants will be able to:

- ❖ Define the basic concepts of climate science
- ❖ Explain factors leading to climate change and list out climate-driven environmental and socioeconomic impacts
- ❖ Explain the approaches to address climate change -adaptation and mitigation strategies.
- ❖ Explain the links between sustainability and the concept of Environmental Social & Governance (ESG) and describe how climate change creates financial risk
- ❖ Explain climate change risk management framework.

- ❖ List out tools and techniques for identifying and measuring risks.
- ❖ Explain just transition and strategies involved
- ❖ List out recommendations of regulations and standards of TCFD (Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures) and Responsible Banking Principles.
- ❖ Explain green finance and sustainable finance and list out various instruments.
